LIST OF DEAD AND MISSING GROWS WITH EACH HOUR

GATHER AT CHURCH

Crushed and Worn Out with Their Weary All-Night Vigil, Old and Young Hover Around Seeking Tidings of Missing Relatives and Friends.

Throngs of old and young hovered about St. Mark's Lutheran Church m-Sixth street to-day, hoping against hope that in this last harbor of information they might find some thread of hope to raise them in their Fourteen policemen were posted before the church to handle the crowd, but they were not forced to any physical effort. Men and women bent with age, tottering weakly on the weary feet that had borne them all night long In constant search at hospital and Morgue, their wrinkled faces blank with misery, their eyes run dry of tears; mothers whose faces were tortured with anguish and little children with wondering fear and terror written on their tear-stained faces gently jostled one another as they pushed their way to the church door and made their heartrending inquiries.

All night long this quiet throng had pressed about the church, their hopeless silence occasionally broken by some hysterical exclamation of woe some tired child's bleating cry, or the pitiful broken sob of some aged man ortwoman whose children and grandchildren had been swept away in the horrible disaster.

From sunset yesterday until 3 o'clock this morning those who passed the "L" station at First street and First avenue on the way to the church noticed the figure of an old man standing near the stairway on which the assengers from downtown trains descend. He was George Heinrich Hausen, of No. 167 East Fourth street, white haired and stoop-shouldered with age.

JOY MAKES OLD MAN SWOON.

As train after train thundered above his head his feeble old eyes would peer up the stairway in pitiful expectation, seeking the forms of his daughter and little grandchild, who had joined the joyous host of excursionists at the Third street pier yesterday morning.

As the hours passed the old man grew weaker and weaker, until finally he was forced to cling to the iron post for support. Never for a moment, however, did he cease in his pitiful vigil, and after eight hours of waiting he was rewarded when a shrill cry of "grandfather" greeted his ears and a little form flung itself into his arms. The shock of his joy completely overwhelmed the old man and he fell fainting to the street.

When the old man was revived the little girl told him that she and her mother, his daughter and only child, had been saved through the heroic efforts of gallant policeman Van Tassel.

As soon as they had been landed on the Manhattan shore they had burried to their home to tell of their safety, but meanwhile the grandfather had gone in search of them and they had hunted vainly for him at DITTRICH, GEORGE, ten years, No. hospital and morgue, thinking he might have gone there seeking them.

WIDE SYMPATHY FOR PASTOR.

from the terrible death so many met yesterday feel the deepest sympathy street for him in his bereavment was shown to-day when many, as sadly stricken Seve themselves, called at the rectory, No. 64 Seventh street, and inquired if he his life is almost despaired of. He has been in such a critical condition all night that Dr. Simpkin, who is attending him, would not allow him to learn of the death of his wife and his twelve-year-old daughter, Gertrude.

There is one big five-story flat-house near Dr. Haas's rectory, No. 54 Seventh street, where fourteen bodis have been taken in the undertakers' wagons that all night have rumbled throughout the district.

Every tenant in this big house, who survived the disaster, of the door to go on the excursion, has been compelled to put on mourning, and the door to go on the excursion, has been compelled to put on mourning, and the door to go on the excursion. The survive of the disaster of the excursion of
